Operations—nerve center of the field's flying activity. Of similar departments, it is among the busiest in the Air Force.

Colorado's faithful sun highlights the beauty of this large, permanently-established U. S. Air Force Technical Training Center.

The Field

Lowry Field is divided into two fields, designated as Lowry No. 1 and Lowry No. 2 with the long cement runways, landing and take-off strips and grassed operations area dividing the two units. Each unit is a complete city within itself—each with its own P.X., theaters, service club, mess halls, Chapels and complete recreational facilities. At 5,391 feet above sea level, the field is one of the highest in the country. It is the only Air Force base with a railroad running directly across its runways, the railroad engine being radio-equipped and receiving its crossing "clearance" from the control tower. Colorado's favorable year-round climate affords more than 300 ideal days each year for flying training.

Dispatched to help fight a Wyoming forest fire, these soldiers unload food and supplies to set up a base of operations. On many occasions Air Rescue Detachment #12 and Lowry planes have aided fire fighters in the Empire region by dropping additional equipment and supplies. On another occasion Lowry planes brought vital assistance to a tornado-struck town.

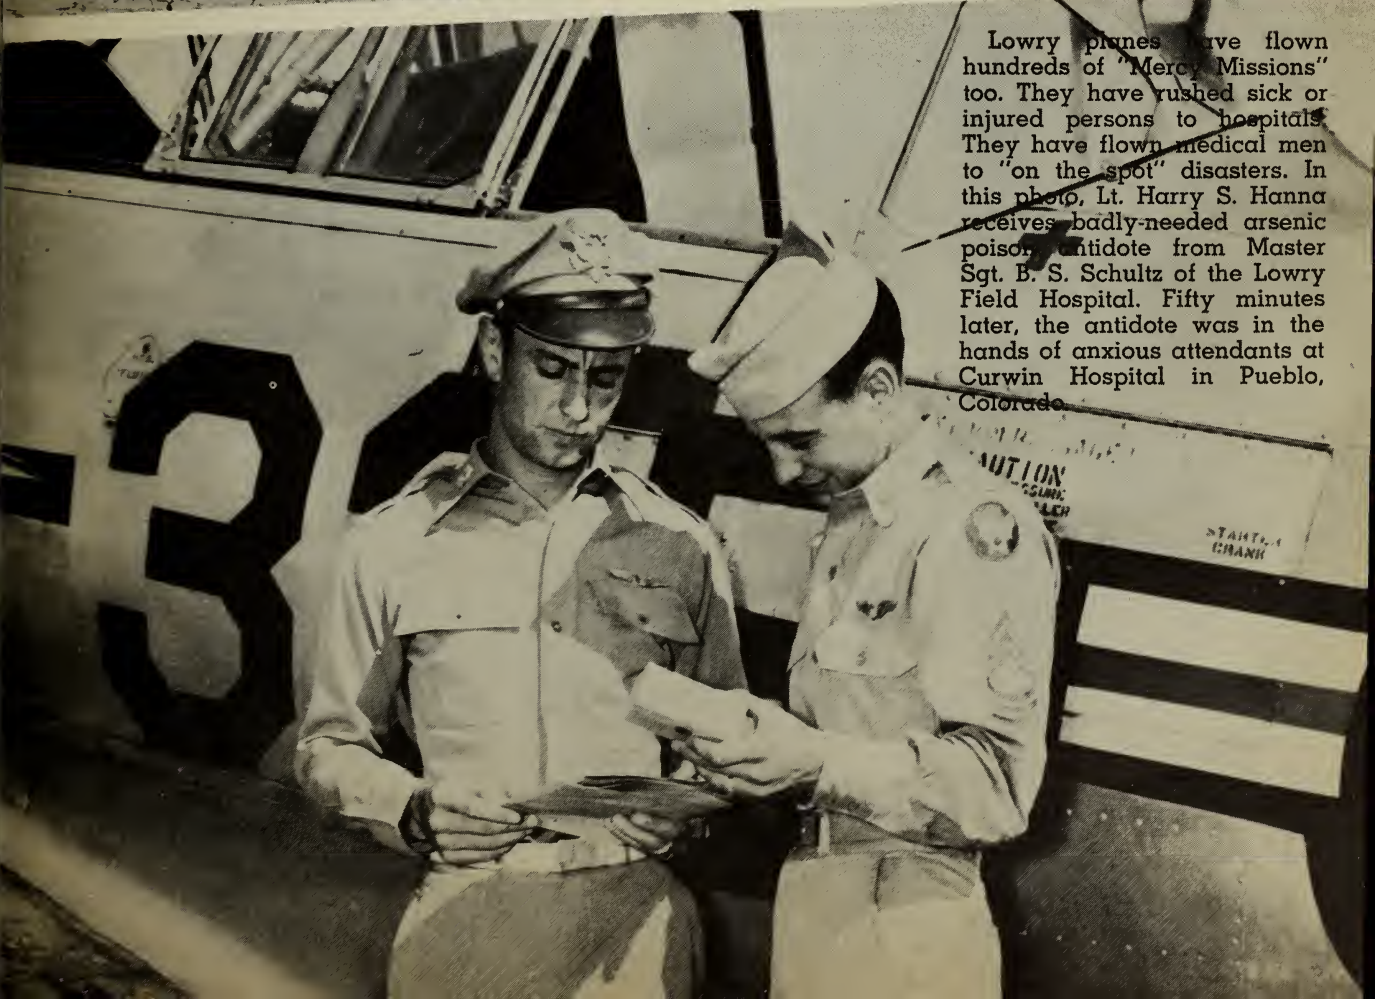

Lowry's Air Rescue Detachment #12 has helped save lives in the Empire region. Air Rescue personnel are thoroughly trained. They serve not only to locate and rescue missing Army and civilian aircraft and personnel, but also are called upon to search for missing mountain hunters, skiers, and climbers.

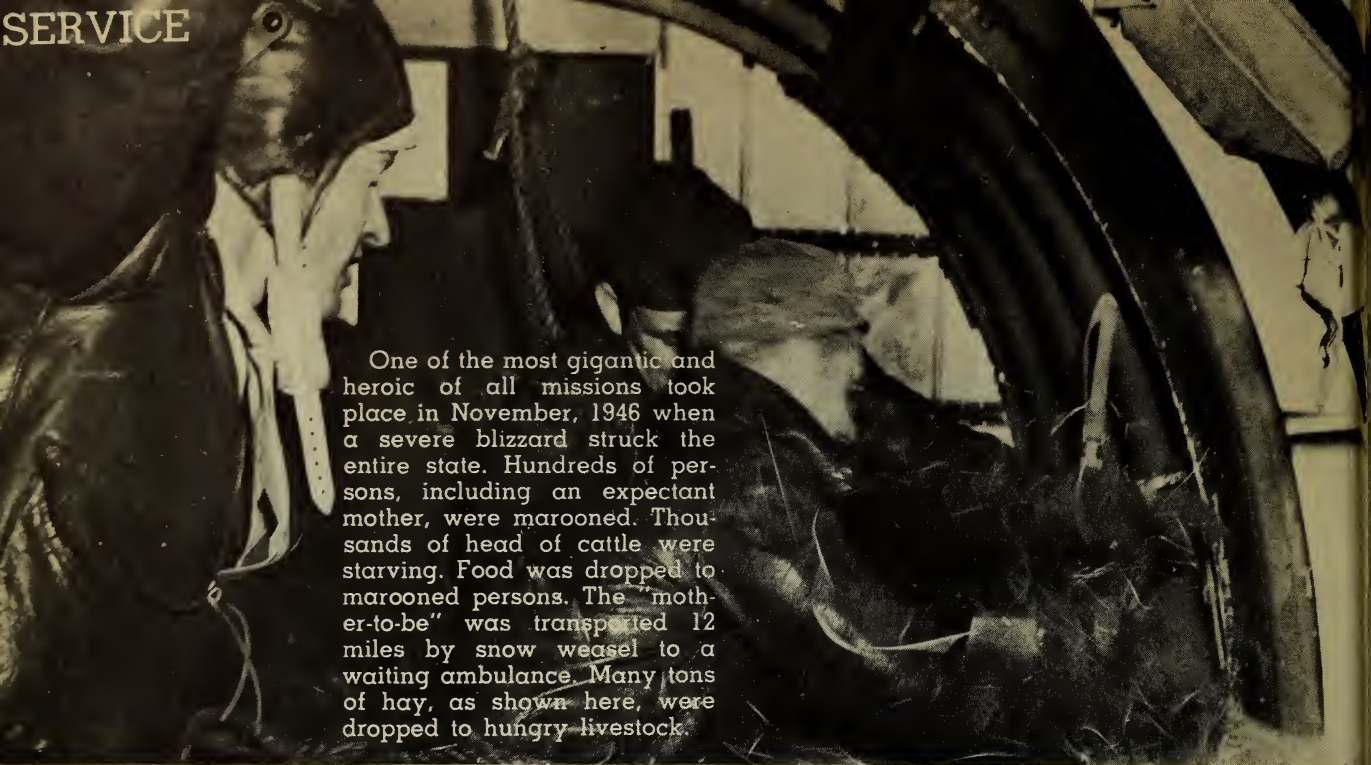

Lowry's famed Crash Fire Fighting and Rescue School—the only one of its kind in the country—has helped to add to the ranks of both military and civilian hundreds of trained men now serving civilian airports have been schooled at Lowry.

Lowry planes have flown hundreds of "Mercy Missions" too. They have rushed sick or injured persons to hospitals. They have flown medical men to "on the spot" disasters. In this photo, Lt. Harry S. Hanna receives badly-needed arsenic poison antidote from Master Sgt. E. S. Schultz of the Lowry Field Hospital. Fifty minutes later, the antidote was in the hands of anxious attendants at Curwin Hospital in Pueblo, Colorado.

One of the most gigantic and heroic of all missions took place in November, 1946 when a severe blizzard struck the entire state. Hundreds of persons, including an expectant mother, were marooned. Thousands of head of cattle were starving. Food was dropped to marooned persons. The "mother-to-be" was transported 12 miles by snow weasel to a waiting ambulance. Many tons of hay, as shown here, were dropped to hungry livestock.

Completely isolated by head-high drifts, this was one of many ranches which received emergency relief for starving cattle. Lowry fliers called it "Operation Hay." For the expectant mother, it was "Mission Stork."

Yes, we said "head-high" drifts. It was Colorado's worst storm since 1913.

The Commanding General, Training Command, has aptly put into words an outline titled "FOUNDING AN AIR FORCE". Confucius said, "one picture is worth a thousand words", so in amplification of our chief's excellent article, this book portrays to all who will grasp the opportunity to scan its pages, the vital part that Lowry Field plays in this all-important mission of perfecting the high quality artisans who are later blended into the perfect combat Air Force team.

1937 TEN FULL YEARS OF SERVICE 1947

Lowry Field is old, as U. S. Air Force fields are rated, having been born on August 27, 1937. On this day, President Roosevelt officially activated Lowry as a branch of the Air Corps Technical Schools after having signed an Act of Congress authorizing the War Department to begin work at the Denver base.

Today, although situated far from any Port of Embarkation, Lowry Field is the "alma mater" of thousands of highly-trained "ground and air" technicians in the U. S. Air Force, who here obtained the knowledge to help them serve their country better.

Lowry Field, upon activation, was named in honor of Second Lieutenant Francis Brown Lowry, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter L. Lowry of Denver. Lieutenant Lowry was killed in action during the first World War while performing an important photographic mission over the "western front."

The field's original site, acquired by the city and county of Denver and donated to the government, included 17 buildings of the Agnes (Phipps) Memorial Sanitarium, with 960 acres of land for an auxiliary landing field, and 64,000 acres for a bombing range, about 20 miles east of the field proper.

The favorable year-round climate and the ready availability of varied terrain were influential factors in the decision to establish the field at Denver and the results have proved it a wise choice.

A few weeks after the field's activation, appropriations of $2,275,000 were approved by Congress to inaugurate construction of the new school and to improve the buildings on the sanitarium grounds.

Construction is begun on one of the largest, most beautiful military barracks in the nation. This four-story yellow-brick structure, pictured below as it is today, houses more than 2,000 men; contains a large mess hall, a bowling alley, dry cleaning shop, barber shop, Post Exchange, bakery, recreation halls, laundry and day rooms. Complete Squadron functions are housed here, including the squadron orderly rooms and supply rooms. Below are the Brick Barracks as they look today.

When Lowry's first contingent arrived by train, Denver welcomed them with "open arms." Flags were displayed, bands were on hand, and sidewalk crowds cheered as the soldiers marched up 16th Street.

Rehabilitation work for occupancy of the field by the Air Corps and construction of runways, temporary hangars and other facilities including the installation of gas and water mains was begun October 4, 1937.

Lowry's first personnel arrived in Denver by train on February 12, 1938. Their arrival touched off a great celebration. The City of Denver had won a long and arduous fight to acquire a major air base. Flags were displayed in the down-town area. Bands were on hand at the station to welcome the newcomers. And as Lowry's small detachment of "pioneers" marched up Denver's Sixteenth Street from the station, thousands cheered from the sidewalks.

When "the greatest Photography School in the world" was established at Lowry as part of the Air Corps Technical School's System a dream conceived in 1934 had been realized for far-sighted Air Force leaders.

Originally, the Army Photographic School was divided between Langley Field, Virginia, and Post Field, Oklahoma, and were transferred to Chanute Field, Illinois, as part of the Air Service Mechanics' School. Shortly thereafter, the name of the school was changed to the Air Corps Technical School.

From the time of its inception in 1921, Chanute Field performed its task well. But, the school was housed in buildings that had been classified as "temporary" during the First World War. The buildings were old and out-matched. There was neither room for a bombing range, nor enough clear-weather days per year for profitable photographic training missions. Therefore, it was no surprise to find that early in 1934 as committee, headed by Lt. Col. Barton K. Yount, Commanding Officer of Bolling Field, Washington, D. C., went scouting for a new, permanent site that would offer both available space and year-round satisfactory flying weather.

In addition to Lt. Colonel Yount, this committee was comprised of Major Herbert A. Dargue, Edwin B. Lyon and Captain Otto G. Trunk. The committee travelled the entire United States inspecting and studying 86 sites given consideration by the War Department from the various cities that had bid for a location.

The city fathers of Denver were wide awake to the vast potentialities of such a project and had started action toward securing the site for this school as far back as March, 1934. It was through their efforts that the Lowry Field branch of the Air Corps Technical Schools came to Denver.

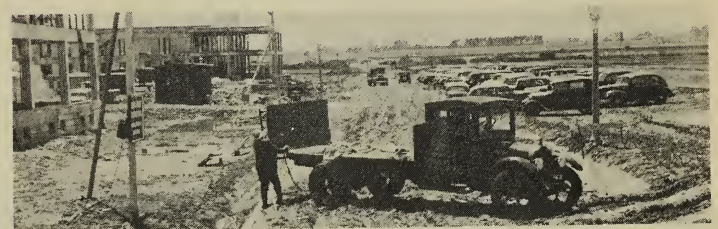

During the period from August 27, 1937 to February 12, 1938, when the initial assignment of personnel arrived at Lowry Field, the new installation began to take shape. Construction of buildings and of runways was well underway when the men arrived. Since these buildings were not ready for occupancy, however, the enlisted men were housed and administered at the old municipal airport until Lowry facilities were prepared.

Mechanical complexities of the B-29 are the responsibility of the flight engineer. While on actual flight, the engineer is able to "engineer" the plane through use of this panel, located directly behind the seats of the two pilots. This was a panel mock-up used at Lowry.

The oxygen system of the B-29 is figuratively the "life blood" of the men who fly in this type aircraft. This mock-up was used at Lowry to familiarize student officers with the system. This training, incidentally, was merely a precaution to prepare flight engineers for conditions they might experience when their pressurized cabins became depressurized.

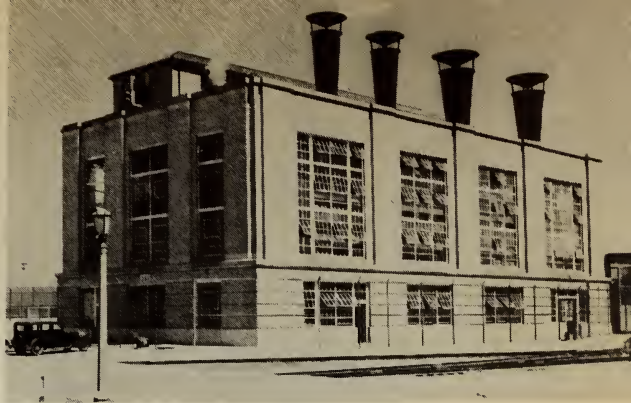

No flight engineers were needed for this baby. It's hard to believe this picture was taken at Lowry less than ten years ago.

— And after

The administration building comprised the grand total of facilities for school, housing, and messing for all the men stationed at Lowry.

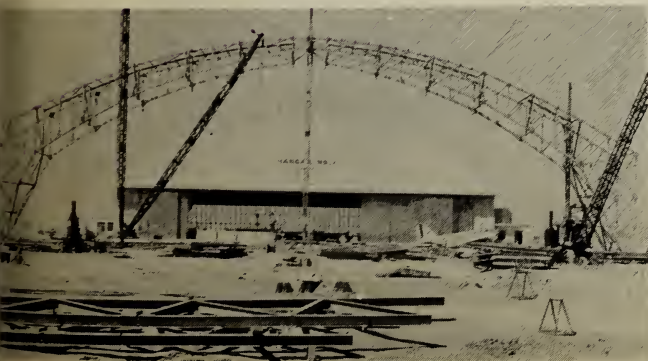

The school has grown in ten years from the initial grant of 17 buildings to the grand total of 725 buildings including the "NCO Villiage Housing," Accommodating Non-Commissioned officers and their families. More housing units are also under construction. At age 10 years, Lowry Field is the foremost military training school of its kind in the country.

Col. R. Beam is host to Mr. and Mrs. Walter L. Lowry, parents of Lt. Francis Brown Lowry, World War I hero in whose honor the field was named.

Women, too, have played an important part in Lowry's commendable history. At the height of hostilities, many of the female sex were trained for important jobs in order to replace soldiers for combat duty. Checking and repairing the ignition system of this giant plane are Misses Helen Sullivan, Rusty Flinn and Donna Huffman.

Many "pioneers" remember these days—when the hangar served as a class and orientation room. This was the field's first orientation session.

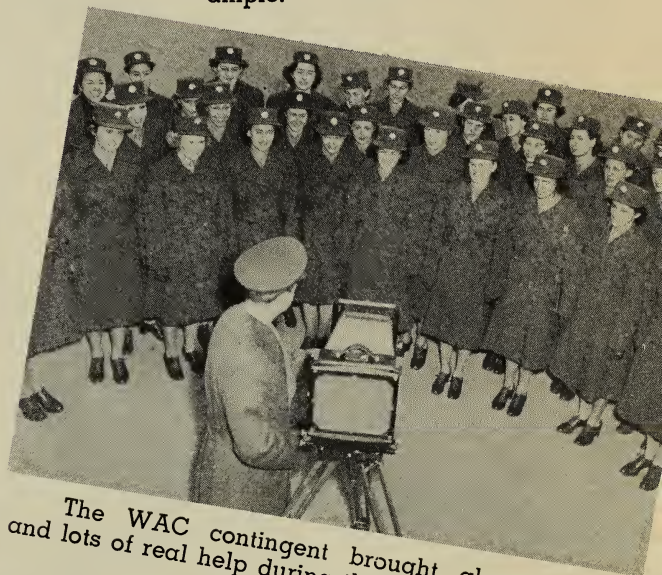

Saturday morning reviews were the order of the day.

Dozens of film and radio notables have brought real entertainment to the field. Take the "Schnoz", for example.

Thousands of Lowry "alumni" will remember this B-29 mock-up landmark.

The WAC contingent brought glamour and lots of real help during the war years.

To combat respiratory infection, Lowry personnel for several years have submitted themselves for mass innoculation.

Down through the years, hundreds of "wheels" have visited the field, either officially or unofficially.

DEPARTMENT OF PHOTOGRAPHIC TRAINING

The Department of Photographic Training originated as the "School of Aerial Photography" at Langley Field in 1917, moved to Chanute Field in 1922, then became permanently established at Lowry in February, 1938.

During this first year, the school registered 12 men each two months for a four months course in an unheated, windowless building.

But, as war clouds gathered, the entry rate grew to 100 men per month; a Laboratory Commanders' course for cadets was activated; the officers' course was remodeled to train photographic mapping pilots.

Then came Pearl Harbor, and in a matter of hours the training program was accelerated to war-time speed. Soon, training was on an around-the-clock basis for 180 men arriving weekly. Instructing personnel grew to over 600.

In February, 1942, the Department moved into its new modern three-story permanent brick building—built at a cost of more than a half million dollars.

Early in 1943, the Department hit its peak—starting over 200 new students in training each week.

Today, the department produces fewer graduates with better training. Five main courses are offered—for Photo Laboratory Technicians, Camera Technicians, Enlisted Aerial Photographers, Officer Aerial Photographers, and Public Relations Photographers.

Lt. Col. S. T. Bush, center, is the department's director. Assistant Director is CWO Grover B. Gilbert, left, and Administrative Assistant to the Director is Master Sgt. Stanley Pejaszek, right.

TRAINING

In all Lowry schools, mock-up demonstrations have replaced blackboards for easier, more effective training. This photo class studies by use of a light-meter mock-up.

Students in camera repair class learn by actual practice how to maintain ground and aerial cameras and photographic accessories and equipment in tip-top working order.

Practically every phase of modern photographic technique is covered by some course at this school. These two students are copying a mosaic.

TRAINING

Training to become a Photo Lab Technician is the basic seven-week course first offered most students. Naturally, laboratory training gets the most interest in this course.

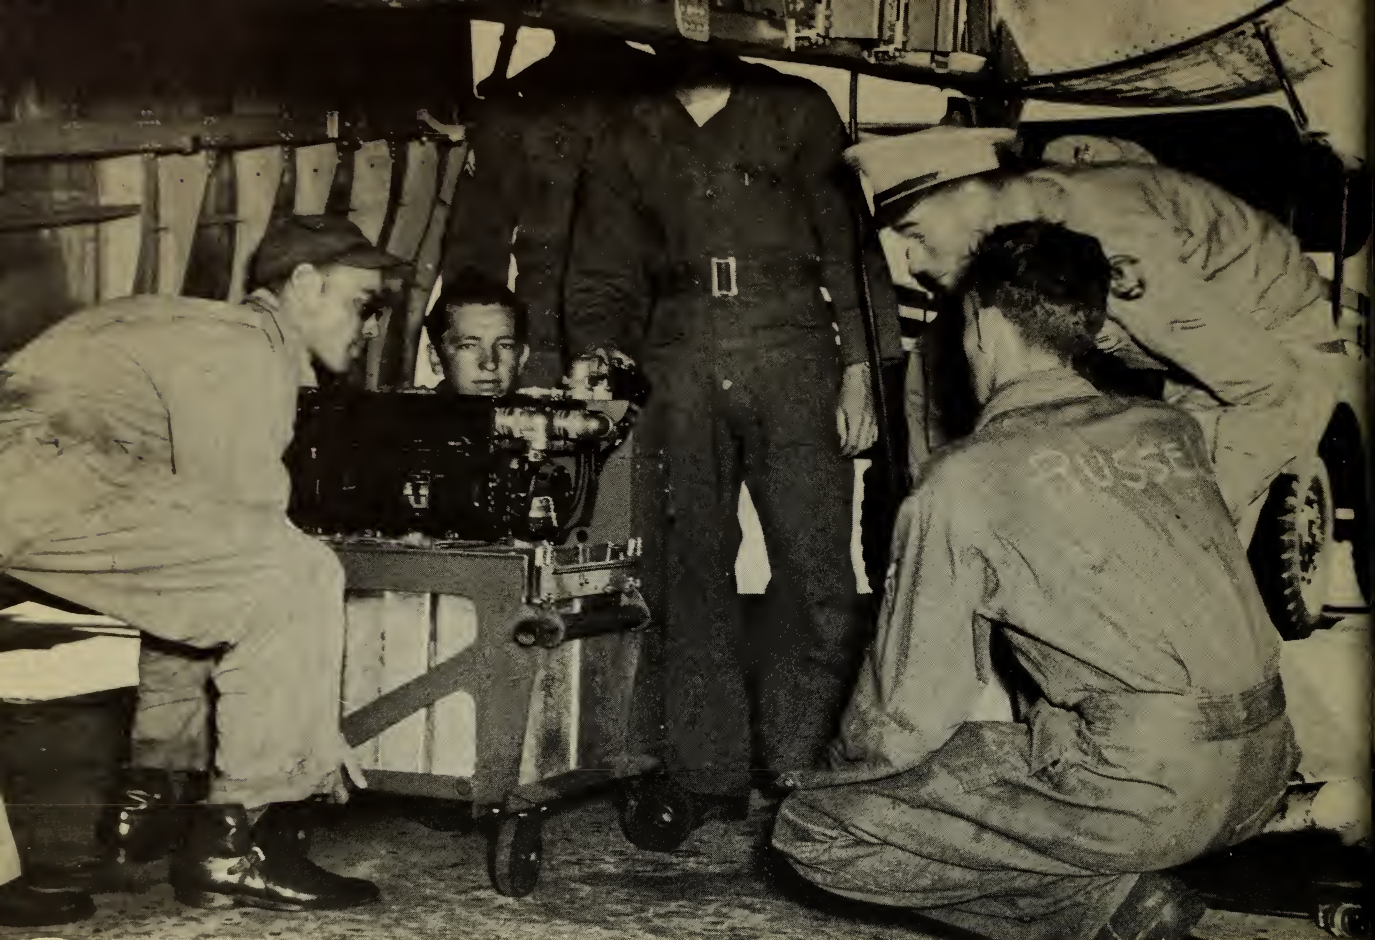

The only one of its kind in the Air Force, the Lowry school trains students with the finest, most recently-developed equipment obtainable.

In any type of photography—ground or aerial—lighted and shadow areas are all important. This class receives a practical lighting demonstration.

Department Of Armament Building

The Department of Armament Training began in 1921 at Chanute Field, Illinois, and was transferred to Lowry Field, Colorado in February, 1938. At one time Buckley Field was a sub-station for Armament Training, and at that time, the peak student load was approximately 15,000. Thousands of personnel have been trained in the various phases of Armament Training presented at Lowry Field.

The Armament Department is divided into 6 Branches, of which, 14 different courses are taught.

The courses in the Department of Armament by Branches are as follows:

a. AIRPLANE ARMAMENT OFFICERS' BRANCH

The Airplane Armament Officers' Course in which officer personnel are trained to supervise air and ground crew units in all maintenance phases of aircraft armament and chemical materials and equipment.

b. AIRPLANE ARMORERS BRANCH

The Airplane Armorers Course in which enlisted personnel are trained to perform 1st and 2nd echelon of maintenance on all armament except bombsights and remote control turret systems and related sights.

c. POWER TURRET AND GUNSIGHT BRANCH

(1) Power Turret and Gunsights Mechanic

Course in which enlisted personnel are taught to perform 1st and 2nd echelon maintenance on locally controlled power turrets and related sights and equipment.

(2) Power Turret and Gunsight Repairman Course in which enlisted personnel are trained to perform all echelons (1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th) of maintenance

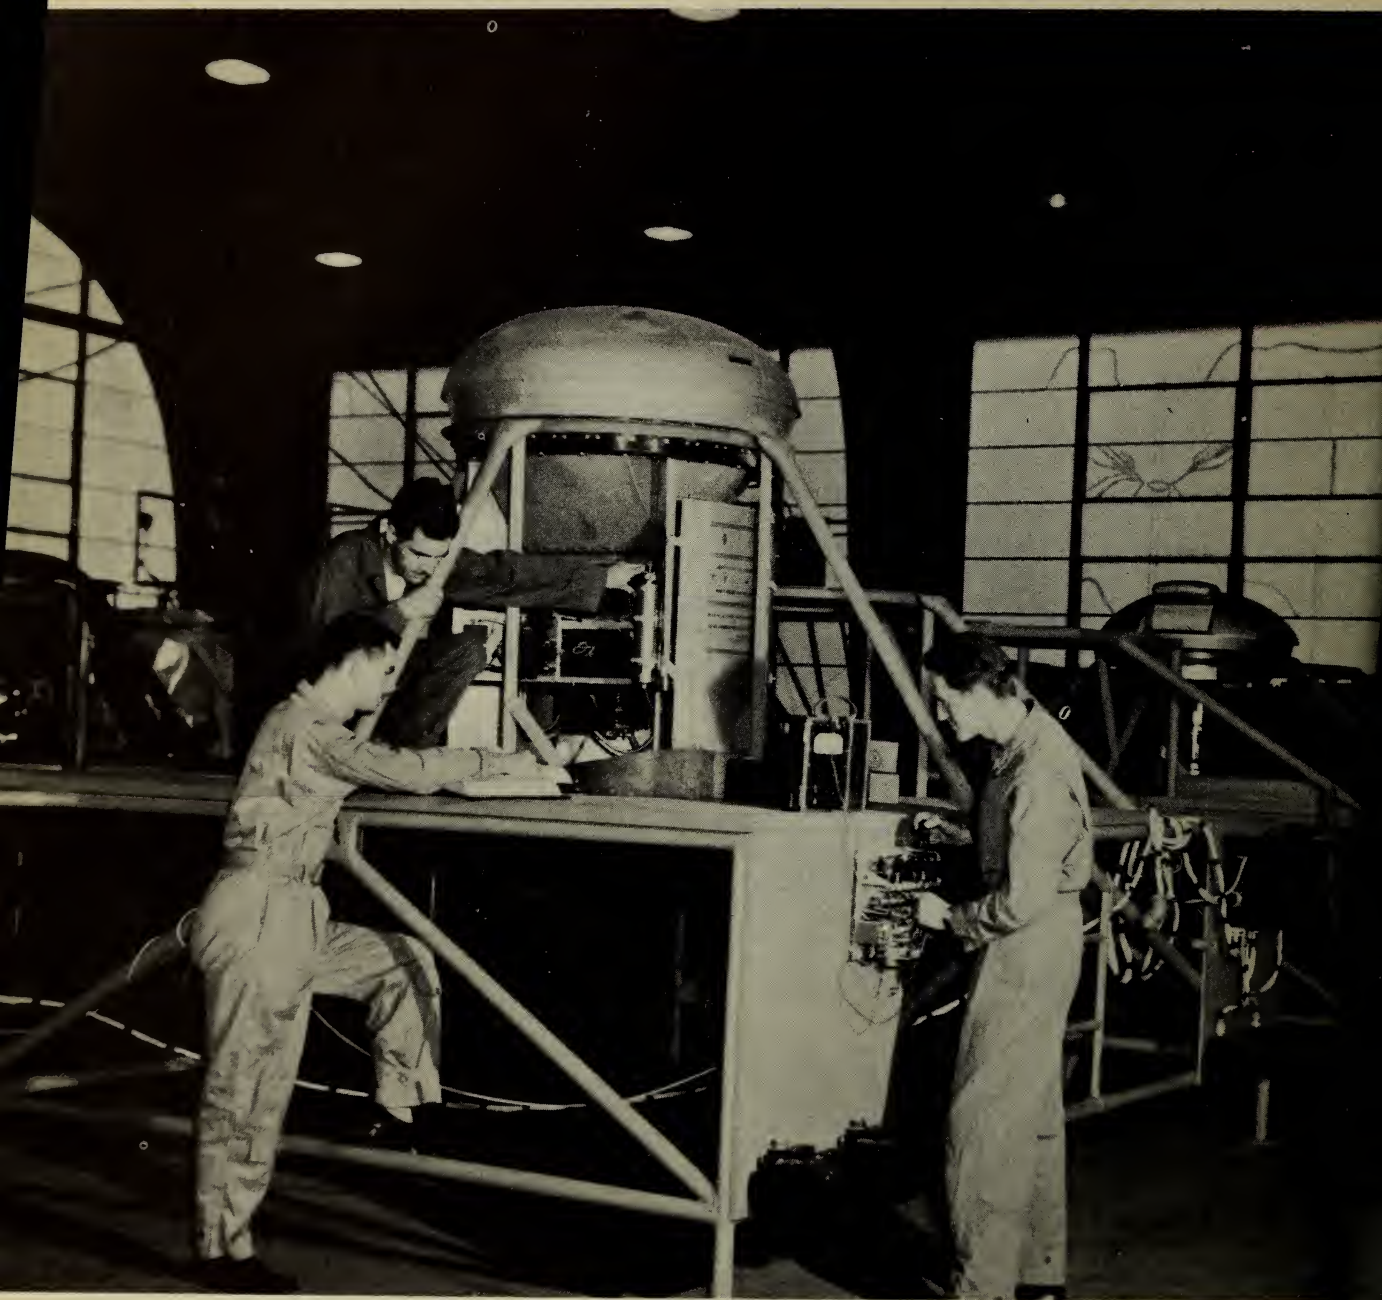

In Armament Training, too, sectional drawings, mock-ups and the use of actual units make learning easier.

- nance on locally controlled power turrets, sights, and related equipment.
- d. BOMBSIGHT MAINTENANCE BRANCH
  - (1) Bombsight Mechanic Course in which enlisted personnel are trained to perform 1st and 2nd echelon maintenance on bombsights and related automatic pilots.
  - (2) Bombsight and Automatic Pilot Repairman Course in which enlisted personnel are trained to perform all echelons (1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th) of maintenance on bombsights and automatic pilots.
- e. REMOTE CONTROL TURRET BRANCH
  - (1) Remote Control Turret Mechanic Course in which enlisted personnel are trained to perform 1st and 2nd echelon maintenance on aircraft remote control turret systems.
  - (2) Remote Control Turret Repairman Course in which enlisted personnel are trained to perform all echelons (1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th) of maintenance on aircraft remote control turret systems.
- f. AVIATION ORDNANCE BRANCH
  - (1) Armory Maintenance and Repair Officer Course in which officer personnel are trained in the maintenance, repair and inspection of small arms and AAF ordnance material.
  - (2) Aviation Ordnance Officer in which officer personnel are trained to perform the duties of Ordnance Officers assigned to tactical squadrons and groups, service companies and groups, and air base units within the Air Forces.
  - (3) Ammunition Supply Officer in which Officer personnel are trained in the technical aspects of Ammunition and Ammunition Supply as is required of an Ammunition Supply Officer.
  - (4) Weapons Repairman, Small Arms in which enlisted personnel are trained to perform all echelons (1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th) of maintenance on all types of automatic hand and shoulder weapons, applicable small arms, and ground and anti-aircraft mounts used by the Air Forces.
  - (5) Ammunition Supply Technician in which enlisted personnel are taught to inspect, grade, renovate, and destroy ammunition, as well as procedures of Ammunition Supply and how to estimate and operate ammunition supply points.
  - (6) Ammunition Renovator in which enlisted personnel are trained to pack and repack, inspect and renovate Air Force ammunition.

CRASH FIRE FIGHTING & RESCUE SCHOOL

Lowry's great Crash Fire Fighting and Rescue School is one of the field's youngest schools, having moved here from Buckley Field in April, 1945. The school's age is no criteria of its importance, however. Since its inception, this school has graduated more than 2,000 students. Two eight-week courses are given at the school—one for Fire Fighter and Crash Rescuemen, the other for Fire Fighting Unit Commanders. In each course, students spend three weeks in the fundamentals of fire fighting, one week in instructional fire fighting, and four weeks in actual crash rescue instruction. In order to understand a fire, students delve into such subjects as chemistry, communications, hydraulics, aircraft structures, building construction, fuel agents and rescue techniques.

Fire Fighting and Crash Rescue students receive instruction in the field from Captain Walton E. Avery, the department director, and Staff Sgt. T. A. Mills, an instructor.

Flames are conquered. First effort is to subdue flames about cockpit, from which injured personnel might be rescued.

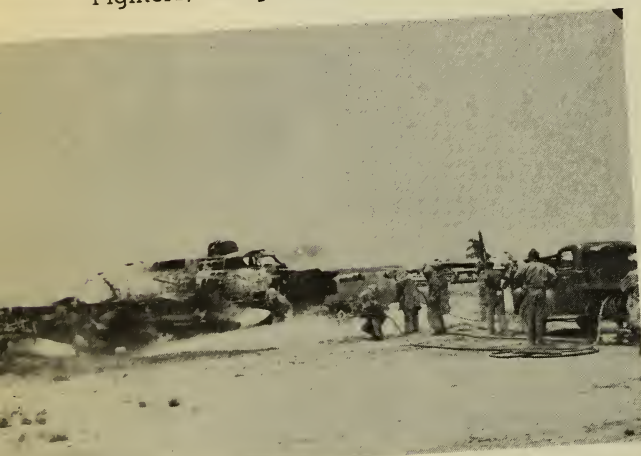

All out! The entire fight lasted less than 10 minutes.

Fighters, using foamite, begin clearing path in flames for rescuers to enter.

Fighters move in closer. Note helmets protecting fighters' faces.

Substance forms a sea of foam, thus smothering flames.

DEPARTMENT OF ADMINISTRATIVE TRAINING

Every organization—whether it's in private business or on an Air Force installation—demands certain expert clerical work. And training these experts at the rate of more than one hundred graduates a week is Lowry's Department of Administrative Training.

Lowry has claimed this famous Administrative Training school on two different occasions. The school moved originally to Lowry from Chanute Field, Illinois in 1938. In February, 1941, however, the department was moved to Fort Logan, remaining in operation there until June, 1944. Since November of the same year, it has again resided at Lowry.

Since 1938, more than 40,000 students have graduated from one or more of the three courses offered by the school. These three courses are:

1. Clerk Typist. A 12-weeks course including instruction in typing, military correspondence, military administration, military organization and publications.
2. Stenographic Course. A six-months course including instruction in shorthand, business English, Army terms, typing and military correspondence.
3. Finance Technical Clerk. A 26-week course including instruction in bookkeeping and accounting.

As in other Lowry schools, instruction in the Administrative school is made as practical as possible. Students work in model rooms simulating actual offices. Such a model room is shown above.

DEPARTMENT OF AUTOMOTIVE MAINTENANCE TRAINING

The only one of its kind in the U. S. Air Force, Lowry's Department of Automotive Maintenance Training moved to the Denver base from Chanute Field in May, 1946. The school has graduated more than 6,000 students. At Lowry, it occupies more than 93,000 square feet of space for its class and shop areas.

The Automotive Equipment Technician Course is of twenty-eight weeks duration and is divided into five phases: Chassis, Electric and Fuel, Engines, Special Equipment, and Inspection and Maintenance.

The Chassis phase provides instruction in the inspection, maintenance and repair or rebuild of such units as clutches, transmissions, transfer cases, front and rear axles, frames and brakes. The use of automotive tools and the first of soldering techniques are also taught in the Chassis Branch.

The next phase presents instruction in Automotive Electrical and Fuel Systems. This phase is divided into two sections, one presenting the primary phases of the Electrical and Fuel systems, the other taking up advance work which includes the actual repair and rebuild, and adjustment of starters, generators, generator regulators and voltage controls, ignition systems, batteries, and lighting and warning systems.

The next phase is titled Engines. Here the complete overhaul and rebuild of engines is presented. This includes such operations as refacing and reseating of valves, reboring of cylinders, line boring of main bearings, regrinding of crankshafts, fitting and adjusting of bearings and timing of valves and ignition.

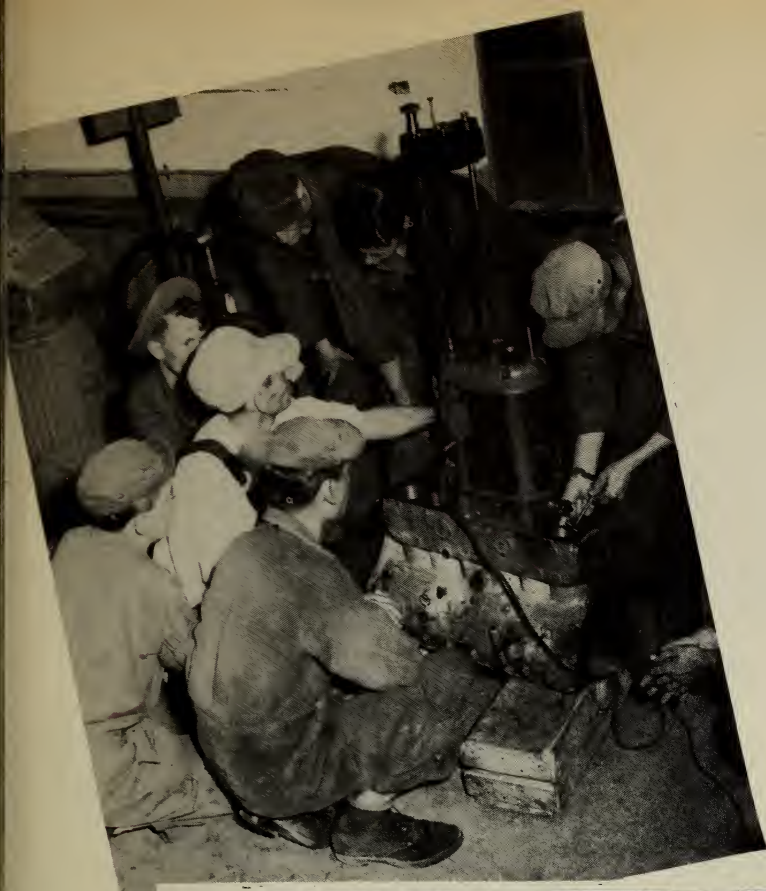

In the Special Equipment phase the students learn to maintain, repair and operate such units as refueling tankers, oil trucks, and large eight ton wreckers. This phase also presents instruction in gasoline driven heaters, and portable electric power plants.

In Inspection and Maintenance, the student puts into practice on operating vehicles, the things learned in the previous phases. The phase is set up as a model for using organizations. Instruction which has not been covered previously, such as, spray painting, body and fender repair and welding are presented at this time.

Instruction in the Chassis phase includes training in clutches, transmissions, transfer cases, front and rear axles, frames and brakes. Here, students work on the rear axle of a tractor.

Plenty of colorful, clearly-drawn diagrams plus cut-aways are of great help to students in this class in Final Drive.

This student is checking on transfer.

In the Special Equipment phase, students receive instruction in gasoline driven heaters, used for heating airplanes. Such a class is shown here.

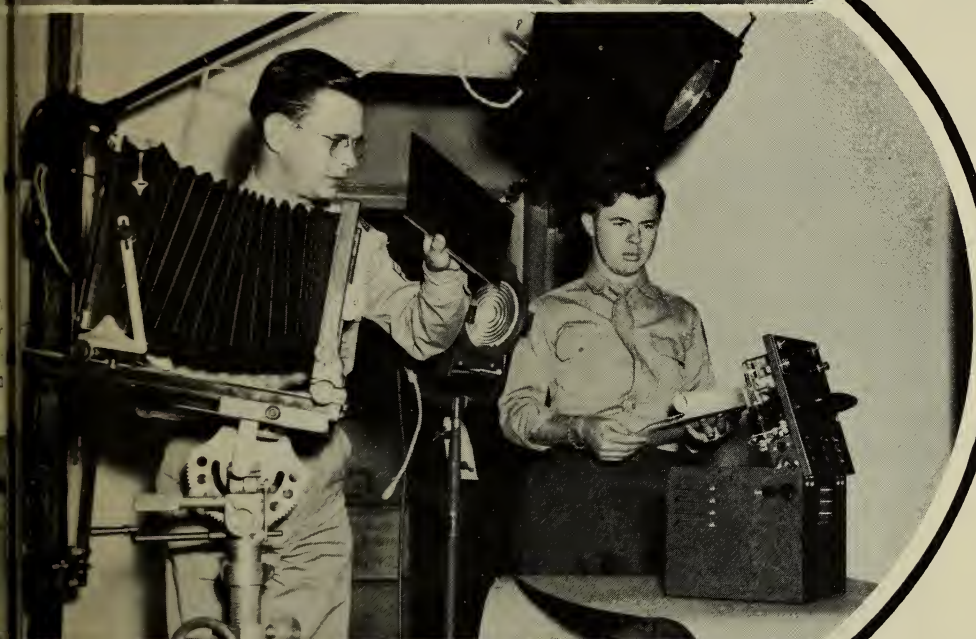

Highly-accurate sectional color drawings aid students to better visualize the workings of equipment. Making these drawings are Wm. T. Newberry, Sgt. John C. Simpson, Oliver P. Phillips, Robert B. Quick, Claude B. Hansen of Training Aids' Drafting Section.

THEY HELP THEM TRAIN

Film strips permit projection on screen of detail-filled drawings and photographs—another aid to easier learning. Here, Staff Sgt. Harold C. Staverman and Sgt. Sam W. Young of Film Strip Preparation Department's photo studio photograph a gadget—first step in strip production.

Also helpful to students have been the many films produced by the Air Force's First Motion Picture Unit at Lowry. Being filmed here is a simulated briefing scene which will last about 45 seconds in "Story of the Fifth Air Force." Shown are Maj. Robert S. Mack, cameraman; Thomas Conneally, Capt. Mark V. Wilson, Maj. Robert E. Douglas and Lt. Glen C. Letherman.

Training Aids maintains a large film library for use by schools. Shown here is Staff Sgt. Glenn Norton editing a film.

FILM STRIP PREPARATION DEPARTMENT

Retouch artists worked on this photo of Major Charles W. Giffin, Jr., officer in charge of the Film Strip Preparation Department.

Right: In the department's art section, Sgt. John Tomporis air brushes photograph. In back are retouched and captioned photos ready for filming.

At the animation camera is Cpl. Robert O. Devendorf.

Mailing and distribution are handled by Sgt. Louis Diaz and Staff Sgt. James E. Smith.

FIRST MOTION PICTURE UNIT * U.S. AIR FORCES

Mr. George Momberg, head of the AF Motion Picture Unit's editorial department, is shown "syncing" a reel of AF film "Story of the Fifth Air Force" produced at Lowry Field.

This film developing machine rivals those in many Hollywood laboratories. Shown here are WOJG C. T. Forsyth and Maj. R. D. Elliott.

Animated sequences have been found to be the most eye-arresting and impression-forming in depicting movement of Air Forces and Armies. Here, Capt. Raymond Fahringer, prepares an arrow sequence showing routes taken by the Air Forces in their Pacific withdrawal to Australian bases.

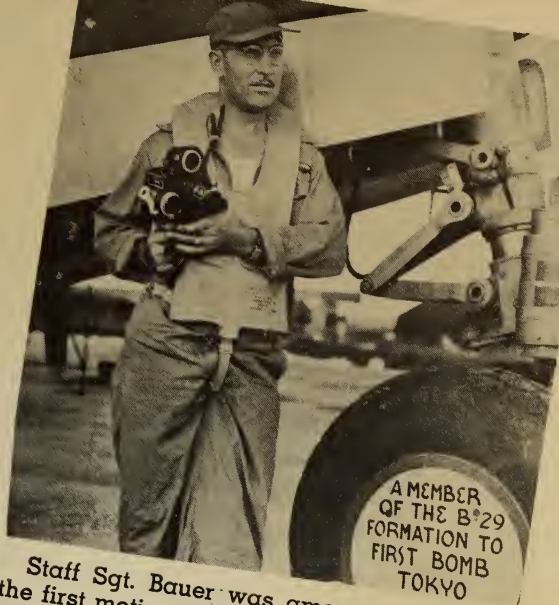

Below: Left, Mr. Ted Zoschke, in charge of film storage and cataloging, makes notes on content of newly-arrived film. Miss Ruth Jacobs, background, is in charge of negative film cutting and assists in film search and record filing. Right: At work in the printing room are Katherine Kach, WO Forsyth Major Elliott and Peggy Thompson.

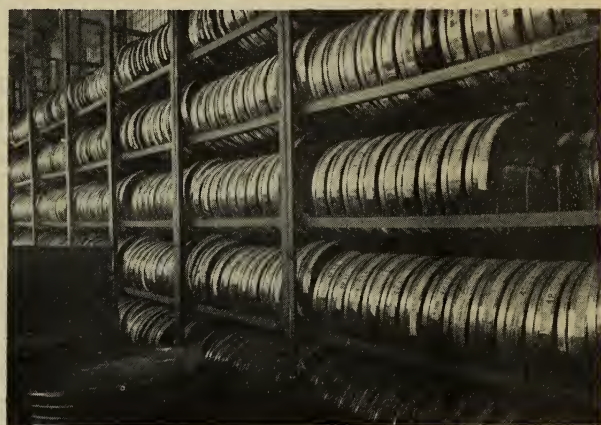

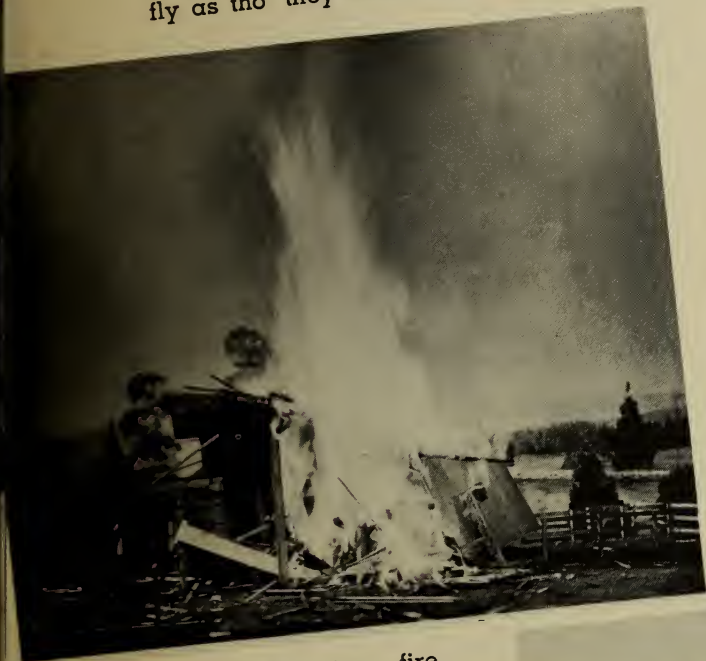

Technicians prepare for a miniature shot of flying field activity for safety training film. In final film, models will appear to taxi and fly as tho' they were full-sized aircraft.

Staff Sgt. Bauer was among the first motion picture cameramen to see Tokyo after World War II began. Much of the outstanding newsreel material from war fronts came from AAF cameramen.

One of 12 such vaults

Above: A terrifying fire caused the crashing of a plane into a farmyard shelter! The loss: 50 hours of modelmakers' work, $15 in materials, no lives! Many of the most spectacular scenes in AAF Training Films were made in this manner. Right: Only the smoldering ruins remain after the firemen quench the flames. The plane's remains can be seen in foreground.

The AF First Motion Picture Unit produced more than 300 training films and labor incentive shorts from Jan. 1, 1943 to the war's end. Many required a great deal of technical "know-how." This make-up was for film "Desert Servicing of Aircraft."

Aircraft crew adrift in a rubber raft after having ditched their ship. Photo was taken in 30 x 60 foot tank for film "Ditch and Live." Technical difficulties for such a picture are overwhelming. An aircraft must be successfully ditched, the crew make a copybook escape and all the trials normally encountered must be packed into one film.

A production shot of a sequence for inclusion in "Story of the Fifth Air Force." Screen duration of above sequence will be about 20 seconds. Shown are Master Sgt. Edwin Sladek, reading paper; Master Sgt. Robert Longenecker, at camera; Sgt. Clyde Hampton, back to camera.

And They Keep Them Flying

Mechanics give 100-hour check to AT-6

One of M-A-T's cargo giants undergoes a thorough line check.

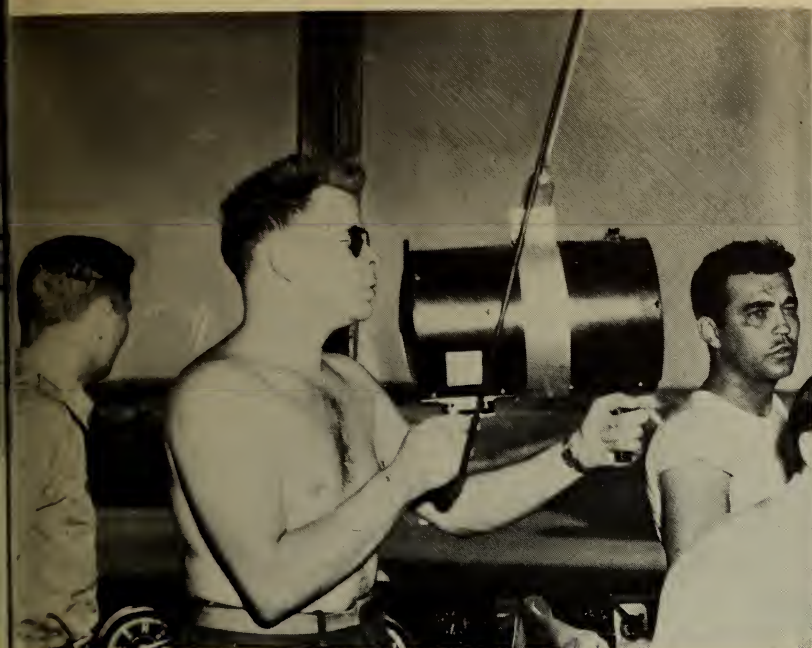

Out comes an entire engine for overaul.

An engine is readied for installation.

THEY KEEP THEM FLYING

In the event an incoming plane has radio difficulties, control tower personnel use the light guard to signal the pilot. It is being operated here by Pvt. C. W. Chiles. Shirts are shed due to the Radiation in the Tower's "Glass House."

It's a beautiful sight from the control tower ramp. And Sgt. C. M. Chappell attempts to prove it to Miss M. L. Thompson.

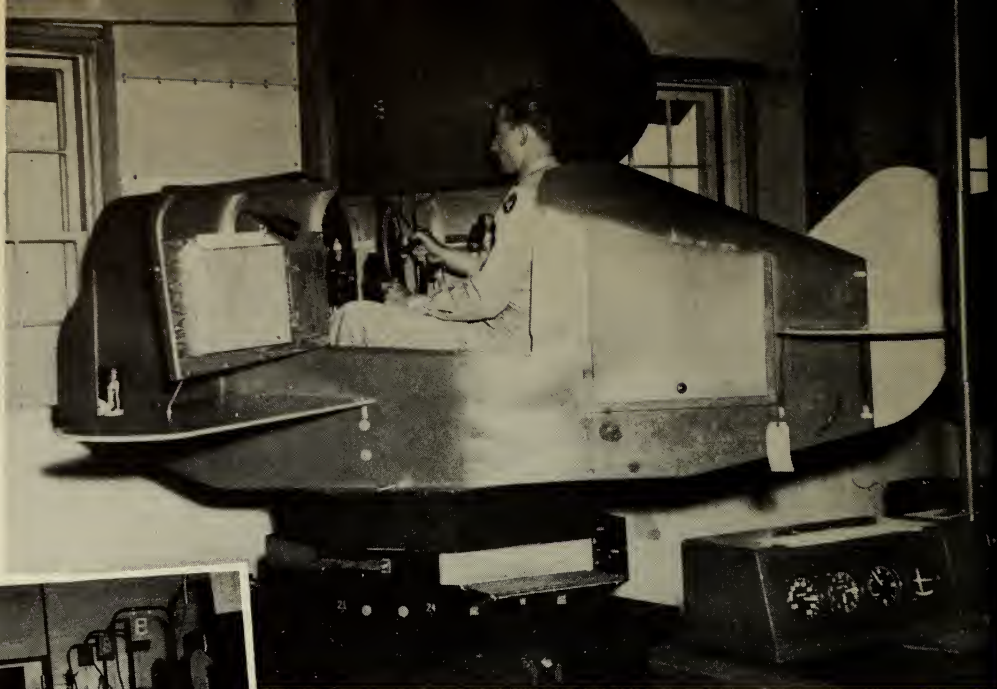

Always in readiness at the field's edge is this equipment for crash fire fighting and rescue.

Cpl. Melvin Toland and Pvt. Marlin Legault have what seems like one of the field's most exciting jobs—in the control tower.

Pilots sharpen their flying proficiency in the Link Trainer department. Inclosed in the trainer cockpit, they are required to "fly" a course by using only instruments and radio. Blind landings are also practiced.

These instructors give radio instructions to Link pilot. Machine on desk marks the course taken.

Other crash fire fighting and rescue equipment which stands in readiness 24 hours a day.

Whoops! How'd this slip in? Anyway, Miss Denver, 1947 gets lots of assistance in her Lowry visit.

Mr. Rocco P. Bruno of Parachute Repair, hopes they keep 'em flying. Even so, parachutes are opened at regular intervals for airing, inspection and re-packing.

Preparatory to takeoff, each pilot must file a clearance form and a passenger list. Each Lowry pilot must also pass Flying Proficiency Tests. Here, Lt. E. C. Stann and Capt. M. V. Wilson, of the Flying Proficiency Department, file their clearance with Lts. R. W. Taylor and R. C. Cushman.

Custodian of the air lanes is the Lowry Flight Service. Through a network of offices in all parts of the country, Flight Service follows the course of every AF plane in the air. Shown here are Captains L. W. West, John R. Coonan and Fred W. Young and Mr. Orvis Frederich.

Work of Lowry's AACS detachment is of great interest to amateur radio operators. This group of "hams" were recently guests of the detachment which is commanded by Major Claude G. Waters.

Airways and Air Communication Service personnel at work. One of AACS' most interesting units is its mobile Ground Controlled Approach Unit (G.C.A.) by which a "blind" pilot can be directed to a landing by means of radar.

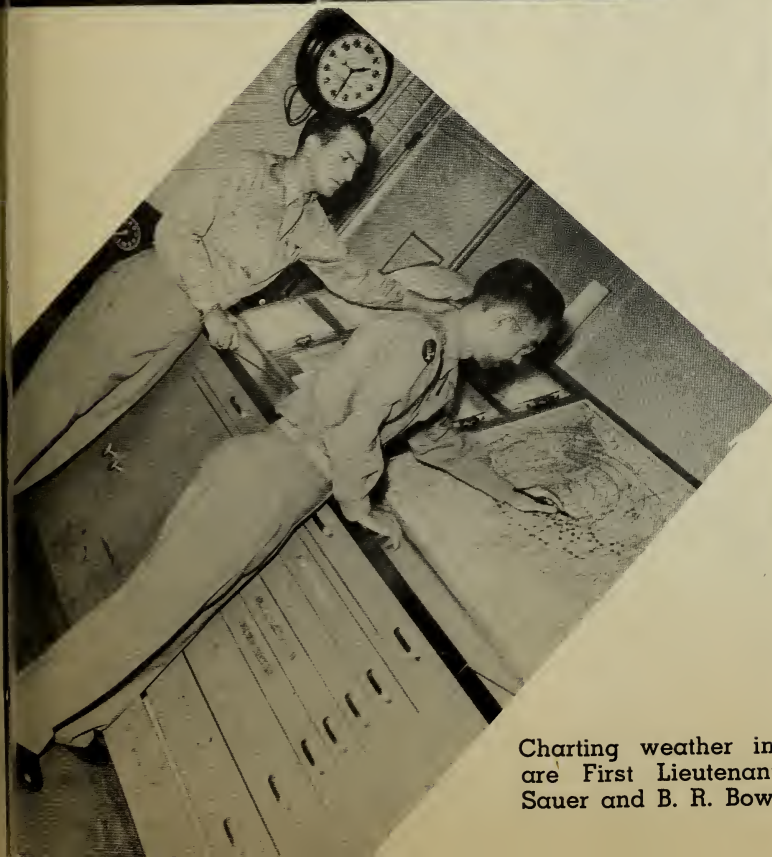

No, this is no newspaper office. This Battery of teletypes is kept busy by Airways and Air Communication Service.

Sgt. D. G. Clark of the 103rd Weather Group operates a Radarscope. With this instrument, operator can spot storms within 100-mile area, determine their height and direction. After being radioed this information, pilots often can detour storms and rough weather.

To provide pilots with more important weather information, Cpl. Richard P. Jacques, of the 103rd Weather Group, reads instruments determining humidity and barometric pressure.

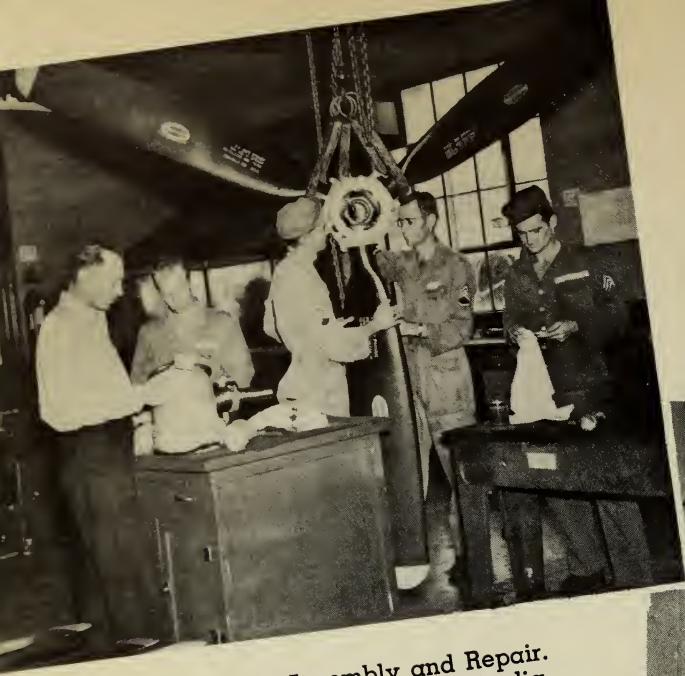

Charting weather information are First Lieutenants Robert Sauer and B. R. Bowlus.

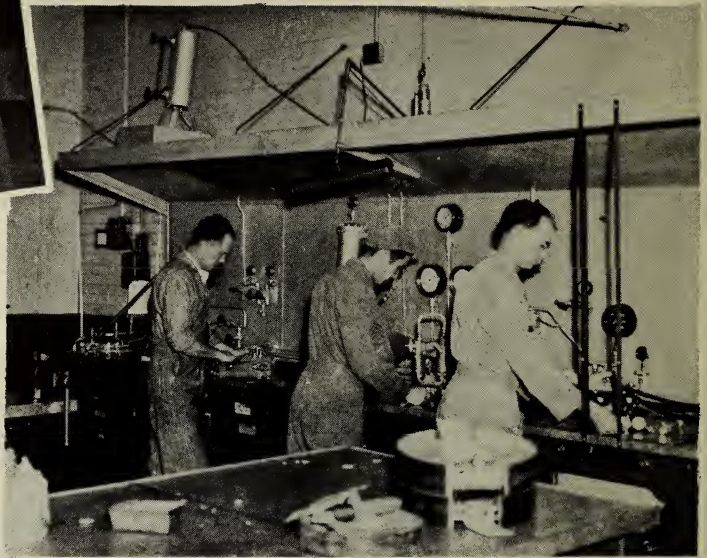

Operations maps help to keep 'em flying too. Here, prior to leaving on a flight, First Lieutenants D. H. Logan and S. E. Hansen check on map to determine what type terrain must be crossed so they can plan their flight accordingly.

Lowry Field A CITY WITHIN A CITY

LOWRY FIELD

A CITY WITHIN A CITY

Truly a "city within a city" is Lowry Field. Located just a few miles from the heart of downtown Denver, this sizeable, permanent Air Forces training base houses practically every facility and service found in a thriving, modern metropolis. At Lowry's Post Exchange, military personnel imagine themselves on a department store buying spree. Lowry's "churches" are its chapels. Lowry's "grocery" is its commissary. Its "restaurants" are found in its Service Clubs. Lowry has its "coke" bars and filing stations, its police and fireman, its butchers and bakers, its theaters and community-wide sports activities. Lowry—truly a city within a city!"

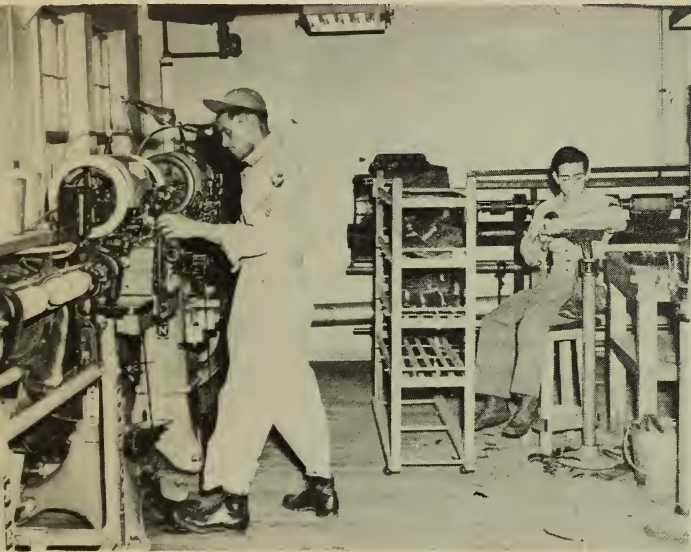

Buying groceries in the Commissary are Master Sgts. Robert Q. Hayes and Robert G. Dennison, Mrs. Fae Velie and Staff Sgt. Leo Renfro.

In one of several Lowry barber shops. The barbers: John Miller and Arthur G. Toles. The customers: Tech. Sgt. Phillip V. Wilson and Cpl. Harold DeMooy.

Every city finds a shoe repair shop a necessity.

There's always plenty of clothing to be repaired too.

Carpenter shop workmen are kept busy.

If it's to be had—it's at the P.X.

Policemen at the "City of Lowry" are the M.P.'s. Here, Colorado's Governor Lee W. LaRoux with Colonel Beam inspect the group.

POLICE

Above right: Every person entering and leaving the field must show proper identification. Here, Pfc. Charles Goodson passes Capt. M. K. Plunkett.

Guards at Sixth Ave. gate No. 2—one of four leading to the field.

At gate No. 3, Pfc's R. E. Nonneacher and Eddie Allen on duty.

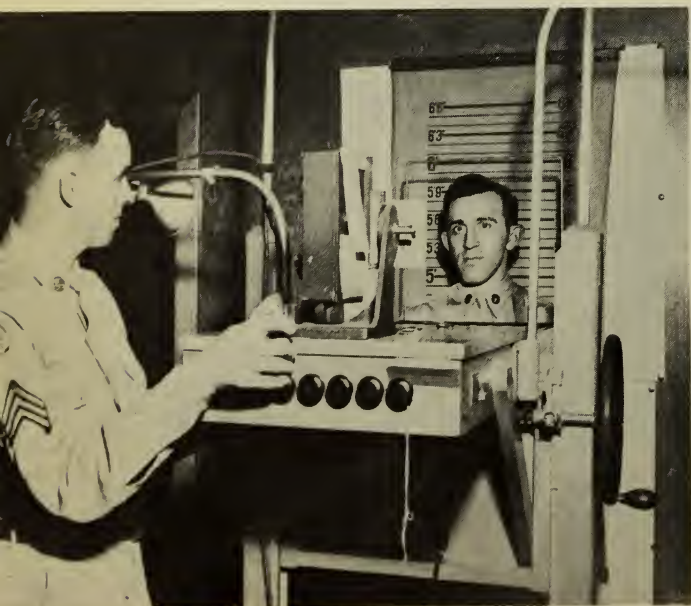

All Lowry personnel—military and civilian—must carry proper identification for entry to the field. Here, Staff Sgt. A. A. Pitcavage is fingerprinted by Lt. Ray O'Neal, assistant Provost Marshal.

IDENTIFICATION

At the Identification Bureau's files are Lt. O'Neal, Pfc. Ray Olson, Staff Sgt. Pitcavage and Master Sgt. Arthur P. Lancy.

POST OFFICE

Sgt. Jim Stoddard "mugs" one for the record. Identification pictures are seldom requested for the girl friend's dressing table.

Always a busy place is a Post Office. At Lowry establishment are Mr. Robert V. Moore, postmaster; Master Sgts. William Heffel and Harold Chamberlain and Staff Sgt. George Marshall.

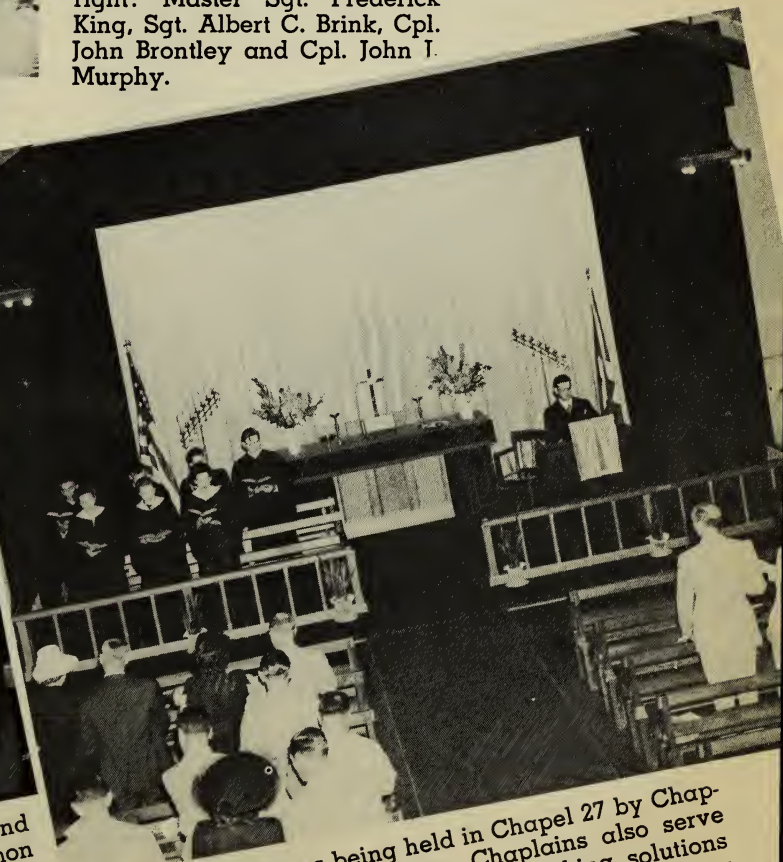

Lowry personnel—like every American soldier—has the opportunity to worship according to his custom. On this occasion, mass memorial services are held.

Chapel weddings leave fond memories. Here, Sgt. Waymon Herd and Miss Helen Biechle have just united in marriage. Maid of honor was Miss Esther Helling. Best man was Sgt. Harvey Collins.

Services being held in Chapel 27 by Chaplain James G. Barrons. Chaplains also serve to assist and comfort those seeking solutions to their personal problems. Thus, the old Army expression "Tell your troubles to the Chaplain" is no idle phrase.

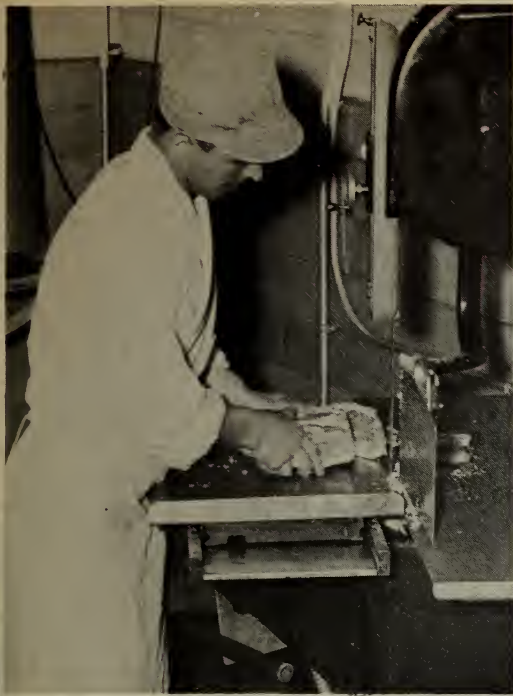

It's cafeteria style, of course. Take all you want, but eat all you take! This is Mess No. 1 in the brick barracks.

By this chart, Mess administrative personnel make sure that "chow will be on."

Meat is generally cut in Central Butcher Shop, then distributed to various mess halls. Shown cutting pork chops here is Staff Sgt. John Konko. About 2,500 pounds of the chops are required for one meal at Lowry.

Though previously checked many times, all meat arriving at Lowry is thoroughly inspected by veterinarians.

Vast quantities of food arrive at the field every day. It will probably take 100 times this many cantaloupes for one breakfast. Shown here is Mel Purse, in charge of the storage plant, and Tech. Sgt. Nolan Winsett.

There should be a few steaks here. The quarter is being unloaded for Mess No. 2.

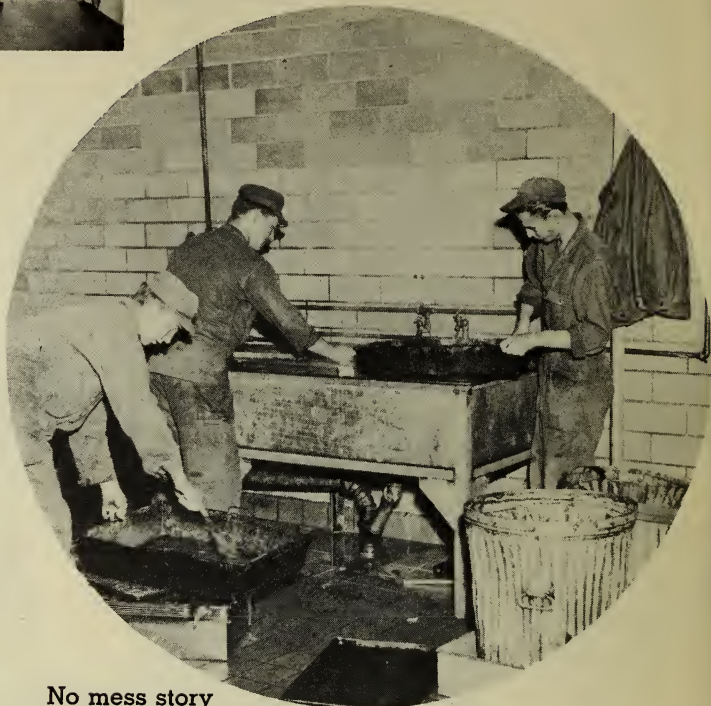

It takes a lot of bakery goods to feed thousands of good-and-hungry men. These are the men who do that baking. These cakes were made to welcome members of an ROTC encampment at Lowry. Tech. Sgt. Leo Wood, third from left, is NCOIC of the Post Bake Shop. Staff Sgt. Herbert R. Plum, fourth from left, decorated these cakes.

Giant mixers, similar to those used in large city bakeries, are kept humming most of the time. Shown here are Sgt. John E. Lackie and Staff Sgt. Tom D. England.

No mess story would be complete without a picture such as this. To eat, you work. Every GI takes his turn at KP

BASE SIGNAL OFFICE

RED CROSS

Radar operation is an important function of the Signal Office. Shown here are Master Sgt. Fred Whiteman and Tech. Sgt. Thomas Gibson.

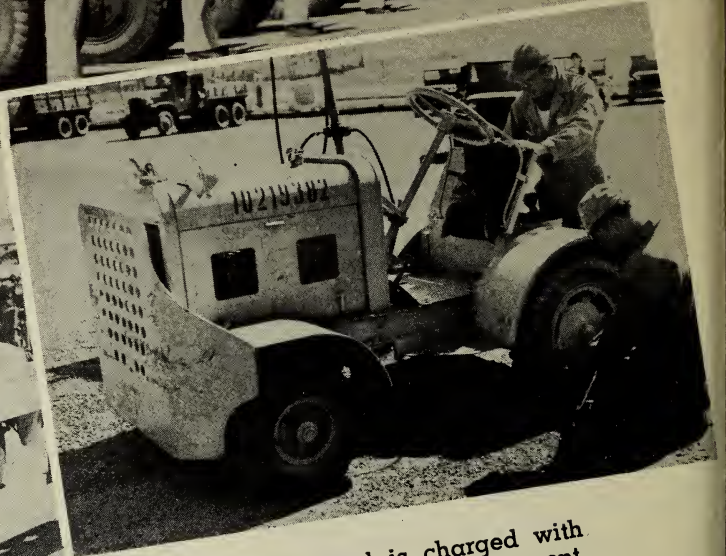

Red Cross Grey Ladies bring welcome diversion and happiness to Lowry hospital patients daily.

Ready to assist personnel in arranging emergency furloughs and financial assistance are these people of the Red Cross office. Shown here are: Bill Schweitzer, Jean Malmquist, Ed Quam, Ruth Calbard, and F. M. Hawk.

MOTOR POOL

Motor Pool is charged with maintaining other equipment, too. Checking this tractor are Tech. Sgt. James Paldino and Staff Sgt. Arlon Tanton.

Lowry's "taxi service" is provided by the Motor Pool. Shown checking out this staff car are Cpl. Frank Smith, Pvt. Carl Thomas, Sgt. Frank Dilosa, in car; and Pfc. Gerald North.

LOWRY FIELD PUBLIC RELATIONS OFFICE

Every installation in the United States Air Forces maintains as an integral and vital part of its organization a Public Relations Office, manned by an efficient staff of technicians. Through this office, both day and night, flow hundreds of telephone calls, both from inside the installation and in the surrounding vicinity and from individuals as well as civic organizations throughout the city. Frequently from across the country come calls requesting information about individuals and the installation itself.

It is the object of this office to be the contact agency between the community in which the installation is located and the persons or organizations within the confines of the installation. All news agencies and publishing firms, i.e., wire services, newspapers, magazines, radio stations, news reels, etc., depend upon the public relations office to "cover" for them on the base, all events of news interest, both "spot news," incidents, as well as human interest and feature article material.

M/Sgt. William N. Robbins, Jr., ex-combat Bombardier, now Staff Public Relations photographer, inspects some of his photo handiwork prior to release to news media.

The Lowry Field REV-METER

Official Picture-News Weekly by and for Lowry Personnel

The Lowry Field Rev-Meter is in itself a section of the Public Relations Office of Lowry Field. The staff of the camp newspaper work hand in glove with the staff of the Public Relations section and the main effort of the two units is concentrated on various projects whenever and wherever deemed necessary. The coordinating office of the two sections is the Public Relations Office.

BASE HOSPITAL

The finest in medical service is found in the modern and completely equipped Lowry Base Hospital. One department provides complete medical care for military dependents. Shown here is Lt. Sarah Metts, A.N.C. with Billy Longenecker, 7-months-old son of Tech. Sgt. and Mrs. Robert Longenecker.

Another important department of Base Hospital is the Dental Section. Periodic dental examinations are required of all field personnel.

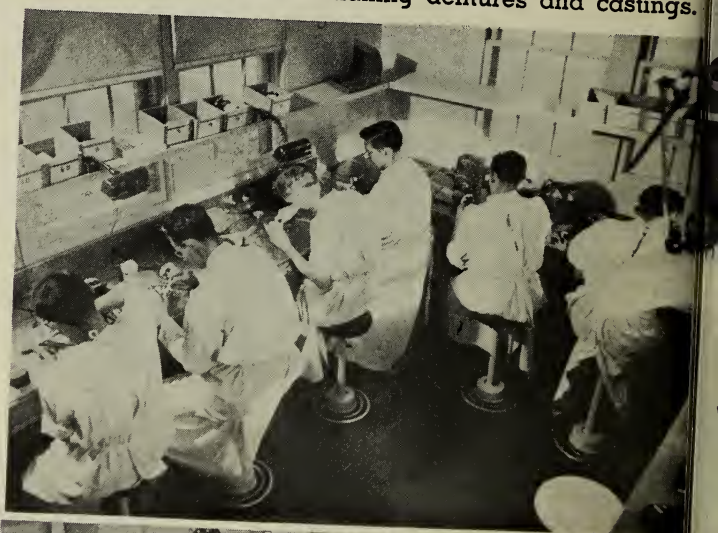

Working in the Treatment and Dental Hygiene Department are Miss Barbara Stember and Cpl. Herman Feldman. Patients are Pvt. Bill Reilly and Pfc. Arthur Johnson.

Every type of oral surgery is performed by skilled men. Shown here are First Lt. Herman Hagen, Staff Sgt. Audrey F. Thompson, the patient; and Cpl. Jack Hanlin.

These convalescent patients find real enjoyment from one of their favorite radio programs. Convalescent status means more than just "sitting around", however.

Idleness during convalescence, Air Force medicos realize, causes mental and physical run down. The result is a definite convalescent program, of which development of such hobbies as airplane building are a part.

Another morale boost to convalescents comes from the hospital radio, station KLFH, which provides 13½ hours of daily entertainment. At the controls is Staff Sgt. Lloyd W. Kuhn.

Like every city, Lowry has a large and widely-used library. Shown here is Librarian Mary Johanne Vacher. Browsing is Major I. P. Mendelsohn.

A nursery is provided for the little ones too.

Women's clubs are an integral part of any city, too. Here is the club building for Lowry wives' organizations.

A CITY WITHIN A CITY

Boxing is probably the most popular sport entertainment at Lowry. Hundreds of happy fans are always on hand to see such leather-pushers as these in action. Inter-squadron matches are regularly scheduled. The field's best pugilists represent Lowry in state-wide and neighboring states contests.

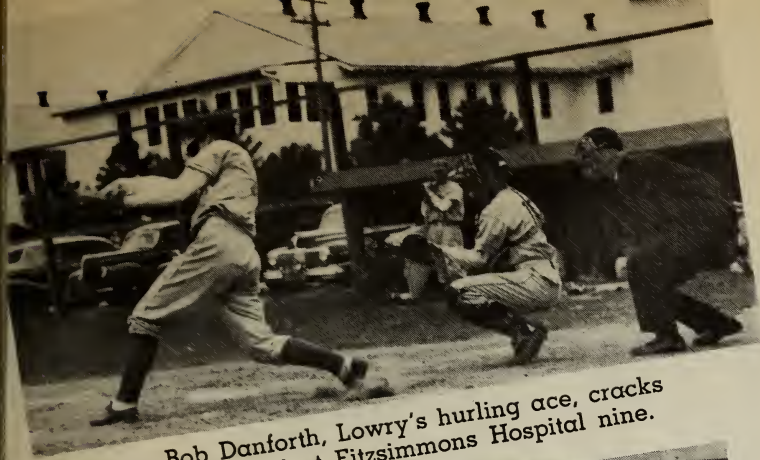

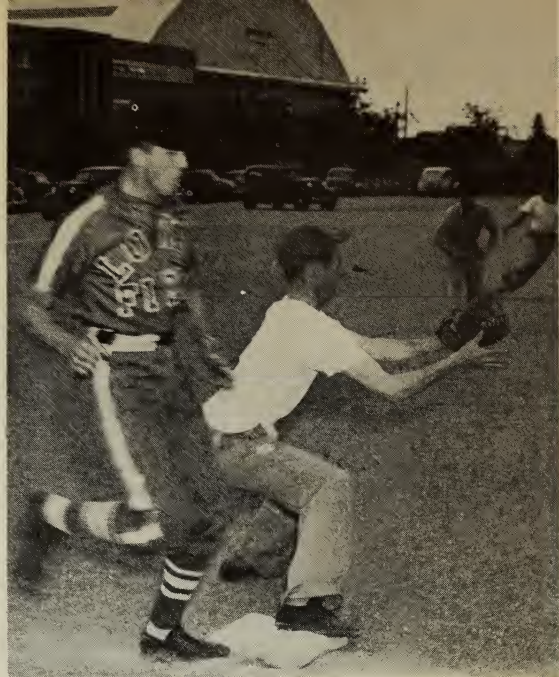

Many championship teams have represented Lowry in basketball competition. Large, well-equipped gymnasiums at Lowry beckon many soldiers to spend many off-duty hours in sports competition or in general physical improvement. Below, Major Donald P. Andre, Post Adjutant, presents Airmen coach First Lt. Joseph H. Ullmer trophy for Western States Service Championship.

Bob Danforth, Lowry's hurling ace, cracks out a hit against Fitzsimmons Hospital nine.

In baseball, too, Lowry has produced consistent winners. Through the years, a number of players now in big league play, have been included in Lowry rosters. Softball is one of the most popular inter-squadron competitive sports. Below is this year's Post Softball Championship team from Squadron B-2.

Track and field competitors are able to fill their lust for sport at Lowry, too. The field each year produces an all-round track team for competition against other Air Forces bases. No section on sports would be complete without mention of Major Joe L. Tasetano, inset, one of the field's most avid, long-time sports enthusiasts.

LOWRY FIELD

RIFLE and PISTOL CLUB

The team comes off the firing line. Included are CWO Delk, Lieutenant Bahr, Captain Davis, Staff Sgt. Stebbins, Captain Plunkett, Lieutenant Dettman and Pfc. Gilmore.

On the firing line.

Riflemen examine targets.

A CITY WITHIN A CITY

Lowry's Rifle Team en-planes for a Salt Lake City match. Left to right are Capt. M. M. Davis, in charge of the team; Capt. R. R. Nahrwold, Lt. G. L. Bahr, Master Sgt. H. H. Battles, Master Sgt. P. E. Ahleimann, CWO R. H. Delk and Pfc. C. Gilmore.

This isn't what you think. Rather, it's Master Sgt. B. H. Battles digging for his gunsight after it dropped into a gopher hole at the National Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio.

Lowry team poses at Camp Perry with Major Jack Crutchfield, son of Brig. Gen. A. B. Critchfield, founder of the National Matches. With the major are his mother and wife.

Lowry's Rifle and Pistol Team is paid the honor of a visit from Col. T. F. Wesels, (center, back row) Executive Officer, National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice.

Every Lowryite has had some weapons training.

Even in the Air Corps, you learn to use a gun on the ground. Skeet shooting is included in basic training for aerial gunners.

Mighty small targets, we'd say!

Range practice for Pistol Team members.

Up go the targets!

A CITY WITHIN A CITY

The woodworking shop

The Service Club cafeteria

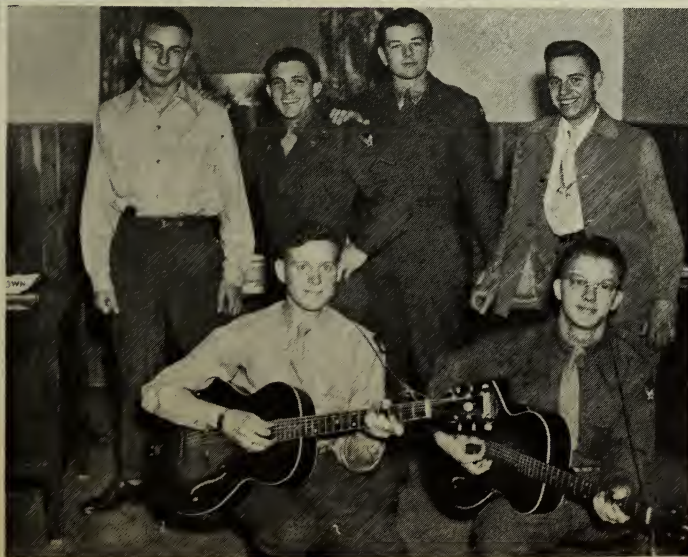

The noon news is a popular after-chow diversion.

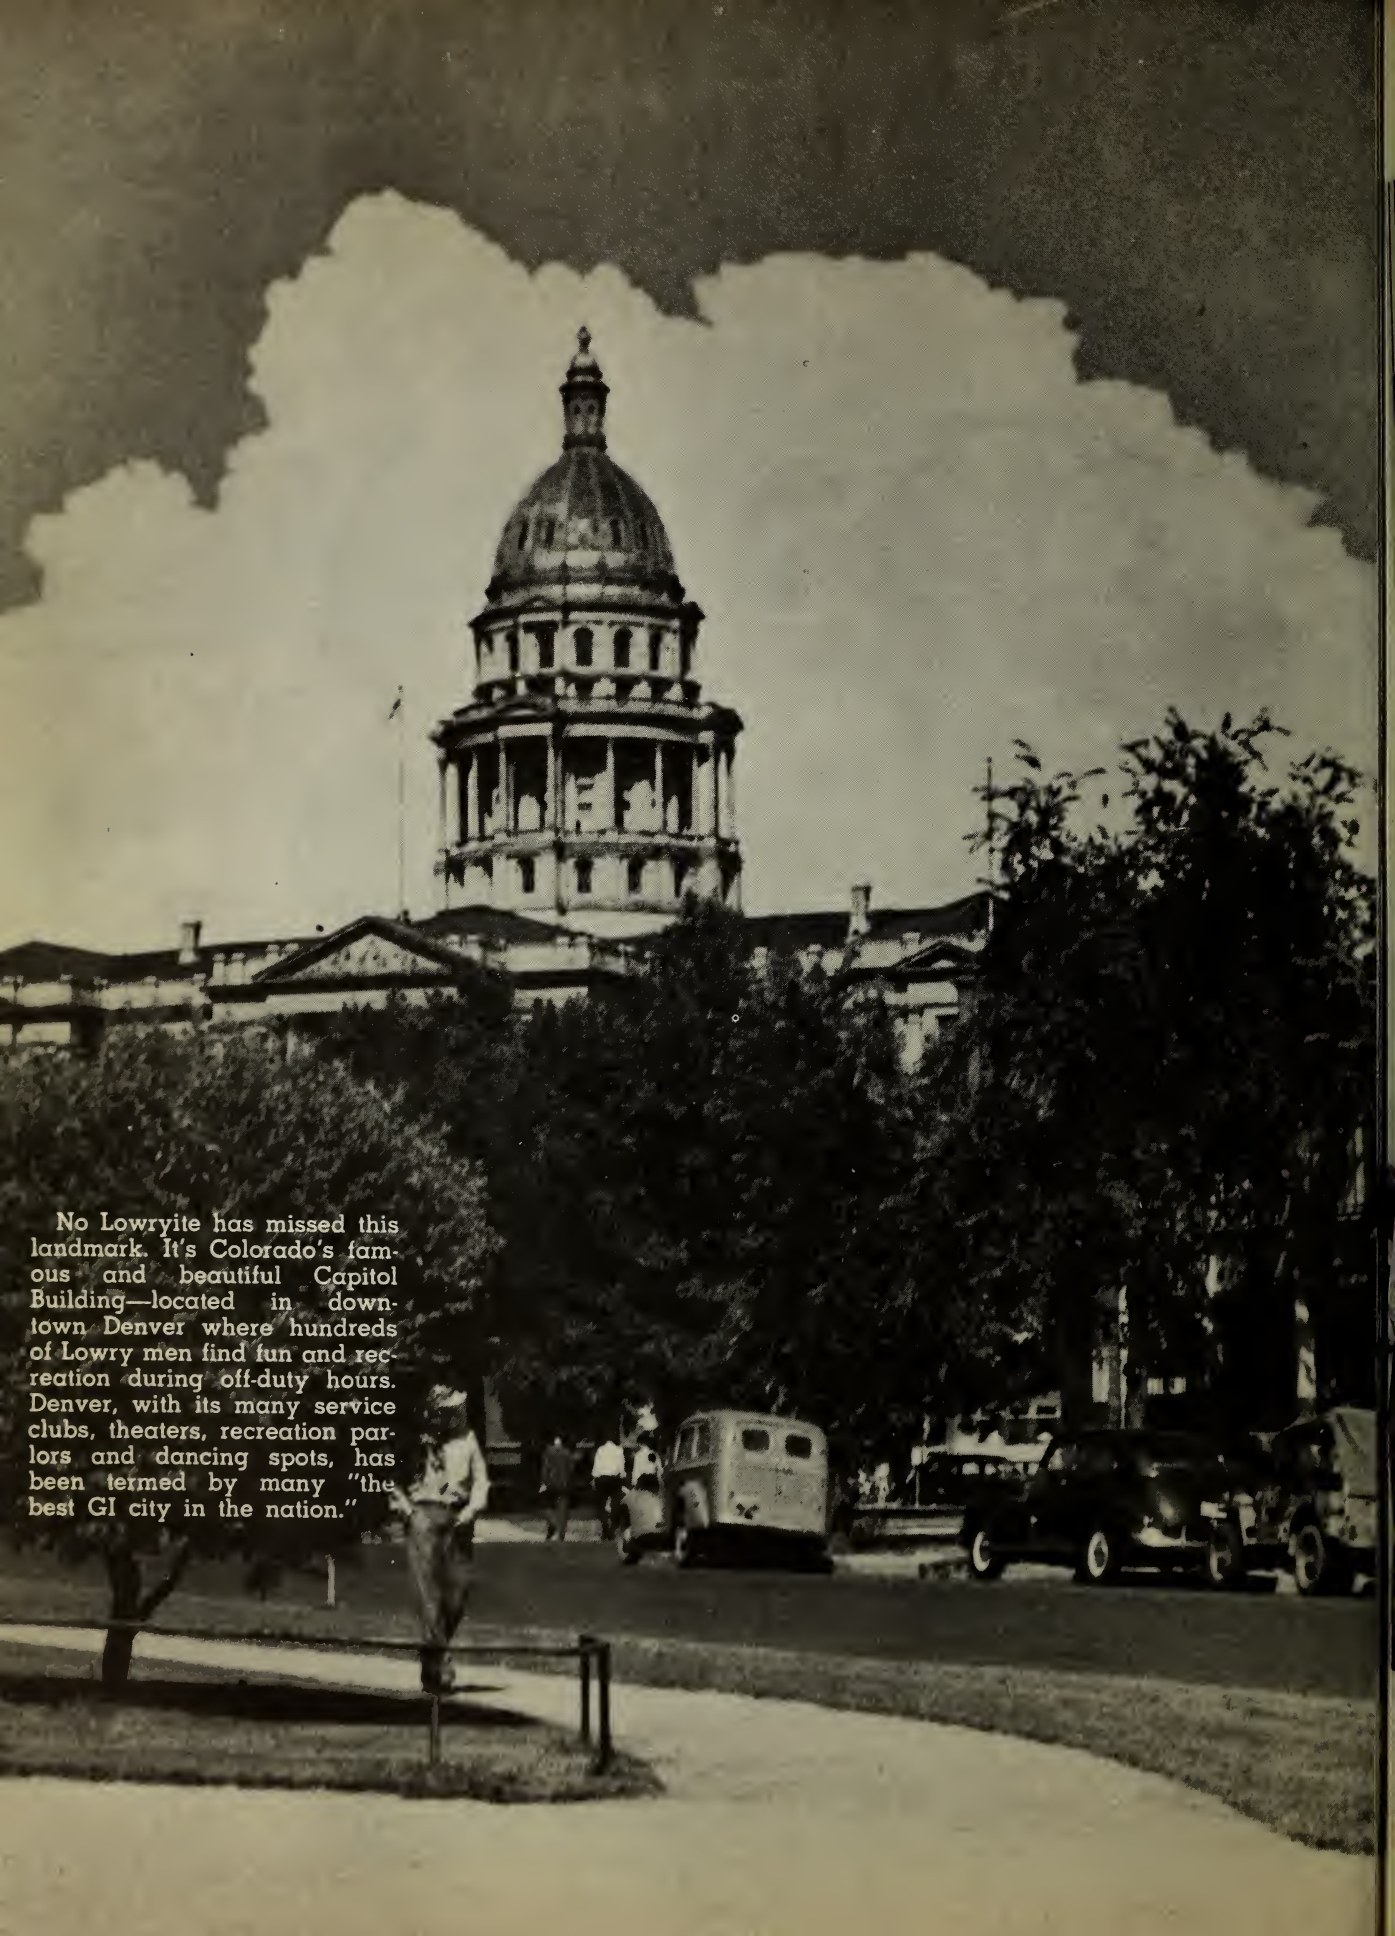

The hobby shop has its enthusiasts.

No Lowryite has missed this landmark. It's Colorado's famous and beautiful Capitol Building—located in downtown Denver where hundreds of Lowry men find fun and recreation during off-duty hours. Denver, with its many service clubs, theaters, recreation parlors and dancing spots, has been termed by many "the best GI city in the nation."

Many off-duty hours are spent in the P.X., too. Of course, this may be a bit exaggerated. Anyway, the live model is Staff Sgt. Fred W. Staten.

Post theaters often feature the latest films months ahead of downtown theaters.

The Service Club of Lowry No. 1 offers relaxation, reading and writing facilities. Dances are scheduled here at least one night weekly.

Not all "at ease time" is relaxing, however. These Lowryites are doing a bit of landscaping for their "home." At left is Mr. James, civilian landscaper. Center is Maj. Oscar W. Aderholdt. Right, Pfc. Carl V. Varriano, who won a free landscaping job in a downtown Denver contest. Varriano donated the landscape prize to his squadron.

Yes, there's housekeeping to be done. Dandelions grow on Air Force fields, too.

Lowry dance "bugs" and their dates are never without the necessary "jive." This quintet is the Lowry "Royal Bombardiers," featuring Sgi. "Stubby" Bylan on the sax.

Service Club No. 3—happy social spot for the men of Squadron F.

Members of Squadron "F" entertain at one of the Saturday night dances.

There's always plenty of talent for any get-together.

Lowry Field.. OPEN HOUSE

A black and white photograph of a young man in a light-colored t-shirt and dark pants, holding a large, shaggy-haired dog. The dog is standing on its hind legs, leaning against the fuselage of a P-51 Mustang. The man is looking down at the dog. The background shows the tail section of the plane and a distant hangar with several people standing outside. The text "RAD" and "AC" are visible on the side of the plane's fuselage.

Several times yearly, Lowry field occasion to throw open its gates to the public of Denver. On these occasions, thousands throng the field to view the latest planes and equipment. Even a young man and his dog found interest in this P-51.

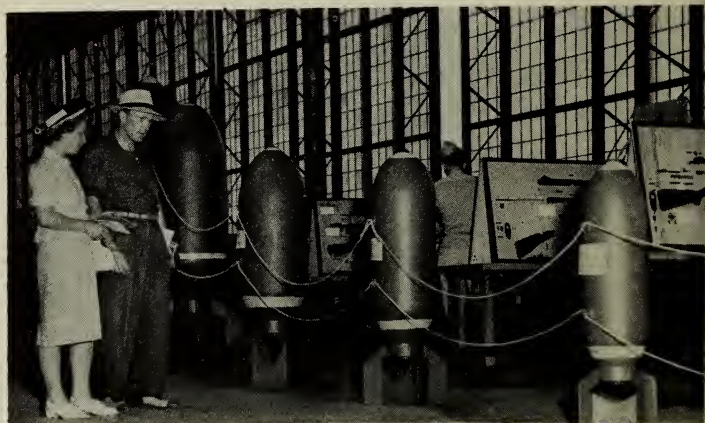

Anyone can see why Lowry-ites like an occasional Open House!

These persons find interest in a flying missile—U. S. version of a buzz bomb.

Lt. Wayne Crawford explains the fine points of this flying model P-38 to young Roberts Cummings and Fincher, sons of two Lowry master sergeants.

Various types and sizes of bombs are on display.

Dr. E. E. Allaby and Sgt. Russ Ellis land after presenting Air Force Open House visitors with a skilled glider maneuvers.

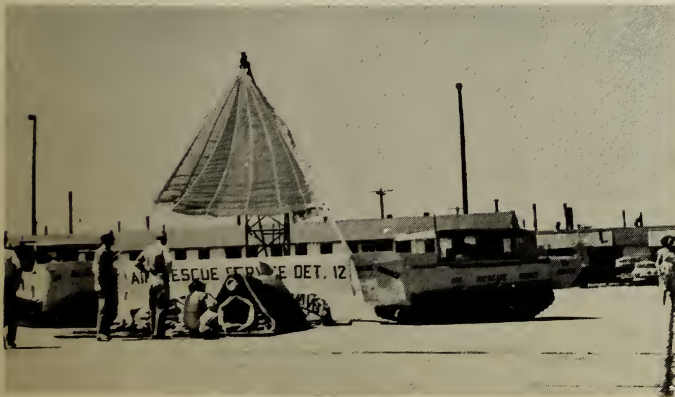

During every Open House ceremony, Lowry's great band, under the direction of CWO Gregorio A. Diaz, is always at hand for the occasion.

Recent Open House ceremonies brought Miss Katherine Cook, "Miss Denver of 1947" to the field. The jeep, incidentally, is used to meet and direct planes after they land at the field.

Open House visitors also viewed a complete display of Air Rescue equipment.

A model plane contest highlighted recent Air Force Day Open House activities.

Lowry is "open" to Air Reservists, too. Reservists have the opportunity to maintain their flying proficiency. Shown here, loading an Air Reserve AT-11 for a bomb run on a practice range at nearby Buckley Field, are Lt. John W. Darr, Lt. Charles K. Millen, both on active duty training with the Air Reserve Training Detachment at Lowry, and Capt. A. K. Patterson, Operations Officer of the 138th Air Reserve Training Unit. In inset, it's "bombs away!"
